JUSTIFICATION:

Based on the Kenai, Anchor, and Deshka River forecasts, this year's king salmon runs are expected to be below the lower end of their escapement goals, which triggers the closure of Upper Cook Inlet salt waters north of the latitude of Bluff Point from May 1 to July 15 as outlined in the Upper Cook Inlet Summer Salt Water King Salmon Management Plan (5 AAC 58.055). Additionally, the inriver sport fisheries for these Cook Inlet stocks are starting with preseason emergency order closures. Under direction of the Kenai River late-run king salmon stock of concern management plan (5 AAC 21.382) and in conjunction with this emergency order, the Upper Cook Inlet summer saltwater fishery north of Bluff Point to is closed to sport fishing for king salmon from May 1 – August 15. Despite preseason and inseason restrictions to both fresh and saltwater fisheries in the last five years, the sustainable escapement goals have not been achieved in four of the last five years for Deshka River and Kenai River early and late run stocks. The king salmon harvest in the Lower Cook Inlet summer fishery has remained high in recent years resulting from shifting effort from the Upper Cook Inlet summer king salmon fishery due to preseason and inseason emergency order restrictions and closures. Guided effort towards king salmon in Cook Inlet salt waters may also be increasing with further restrictions to Pacific halibut from the IPHC Halibut Catch Sharing Plan. From 2002–2013, the king salmon harvest in the Lower Cook Inlet summer fishery averaged approximately 4,400 fish annually. In the last three years the harvest has increased from the 2002–2013 average to an average of approximately 7,000 fish. Based on genetic mixed stock analyses of this fishery from 2014 through 2018, without restrictions, this fishery would likely harvest approximately 100–300 Cook Inlet king salmon in 2026. Given the overall decline of king salmon and increased king salmon harvest in saltwater sport fisheries throughout northern Gulf of Alaska, reducing the king salmon bag and possession limits for the first two weeks of September will support the Alaska Board of Fisheries' intent of slowing the growth during the winter fishery as outlined in the Cook Inlet Winter Salt Water King Salmon Sport Fishery Management Plan.
